Importance of chemically formed sedimentary rocks

Non Clastic Sediments
 1) Chemically formed Rocks 2) Organically formed Rocks

- Carbonate Rocks
- Salt Rocks
- Ferruginous Rocks
- Siliceous Rocks

Carbonate Rocks :
 The most abundant carbonate rocks are Limestone and Dolomite, which are formed by chemical precipitation of calcium carbonate from sea water.

Limestone Fossiliferous Limestone Dolomite

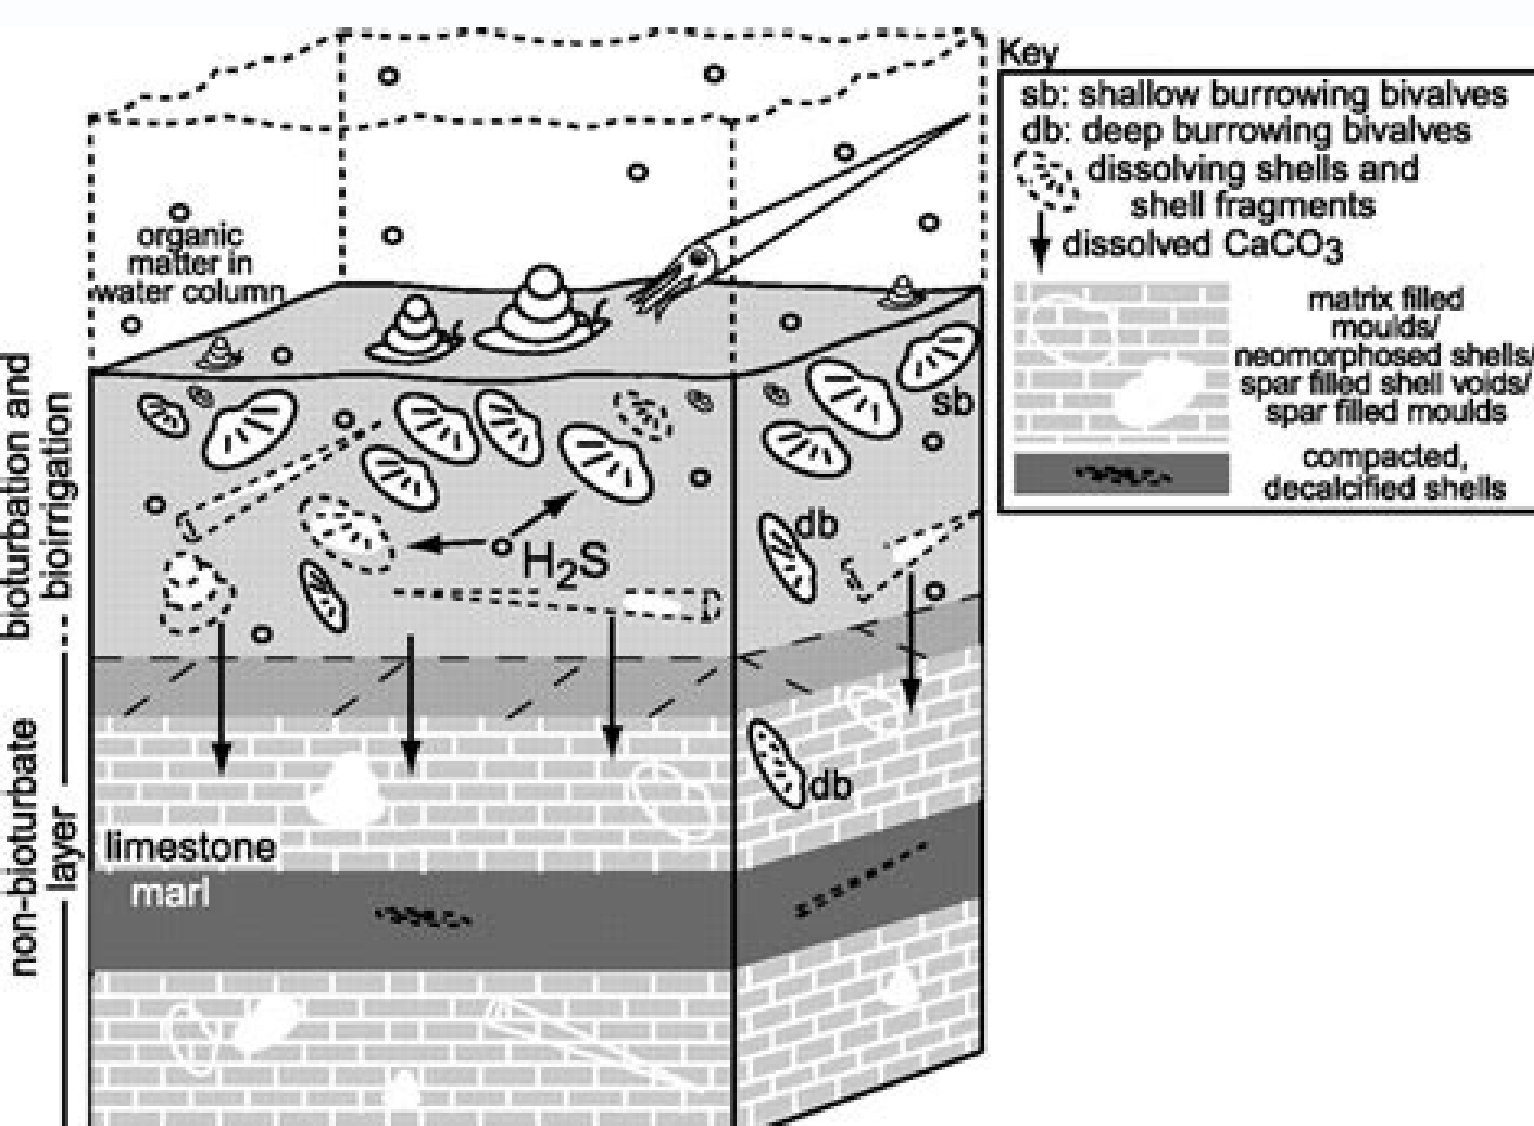

CHEMICALLY FORMED ROCKS:

Chemical sedimentary rock forms when mineral constituents in solution become supersaturated and inorganically precipitate. Common chemical sedimentary rocks include oolitic limestone and rocks composed of evaporite minerals such as halite (rock salt), sylvite, barite and gypsum.

ROCK SALT:

DOLOMITE:

What is the importance of sedimentary rock. How does sedimentary rocks are formed. Who are sedimentary rocks formed. How do sedimentary rocks formed step by step.

^ a B B Choquette and praying 1970. ^ For a definition of shallow marine environments, see Levin 1987, P., 63 ^ Tarbuck & Lutgens 1999, pp. 452 à, ~ 453. Both cement and clastes (including fossils and ooids) of a carbonate sedimentary rock generally consist of carbonate minerals. Where the lithosphere moves down (tectonic sinking), forms of basins and sediments are deposited. On the other hand, the activity of Burrows of the agencies can destroy other structures (primary) in the sediment, which causes a reconstruction to be more difficult. The evaporite rocks commonly include the abundant halite (rock salt), sylvite and anhydrite. The iron oxide (II) (ugly) is only formed under low circumstances of oxygen (anoxus) and gives the rock a gray or greenish color. When the lower part of the sea has a small inclination, for example, on the continental slopes, the sedimentary cover can become unstable, causing turbidity currents. The type of transported sediment depends on the geology of the interior (the area of origin of the sediment). Quartz sandstones have > 90% quartz grains, Feldspathic sandstones have
